"PEOPLE BELIEVE IN AN ENTREPRENEURIAL FUTURE."

Today's work environment is different from years ago. More and more, employees around the world are leaving the traditional workplace and pursuing entrepreneurial career paths. Though many have the desire to start their own business, we wanted to know if they believe that they possess the necessary skills and resources to make it possible. Questions like these are what we asked in the 2016 Amway Global Entrepreneurship Report.

The 2016 edition is our biggest yet, focusing on "entrepreneurship in a changing work environment." More than 50,000 respondents in 45 countries took part in the survey and helped create a detailed picture of how people around the world view entrepreneurship. The study showed that people think of self-employment as a more likely career choice in five years. It also found that a majority of respondents worldwide feel comfortable seeking out and building a client base – a key skill for creating an increasingly flexible work schedule.

All of this provides further evidence that entrepreneurs will play a key role in future economies and for society. Our research has shown that entrepreneurs start a business to work independently and find greater fulfillment in their life – opportunities desired by many, especially today's millennial generation. Entrepreneurs enhance our global economy by creating jobs and investing in the communities they serve. By understanding the attitudes, desires and fears around entrepreneurship, our hope is that we can help inspire and build a more entrepreneur-friendly world for years to come.
